
Emotional Or Physical Pain In Short Stories By James Hurst, Edgar Allan Poe And Saki

Everyone has dealt with some sort of pain in their lifetime, whether it was emotional or physical. "The Scarlet Ibis", which was written by James Hurst, is a tragic story of regret and grief. "The Cask of Amontillado" by Edgar Allan Poe is a story that explores themes of resentment and revenge. "The Interlopers" by Saki shows that conflict isn't helpful in the long run. These stories all share themes of pain and suffering. In these three stories the reader learns that causing others harm not only harms them, but also harms you.

"The Scarlet Ibis", a story about a disabled child and his brother, is a story that covers topics of remorse. In the story Brother pushes Doodle too far, which ends in death. The stories retrospective writing shows the Brothers guilt for the death of Doodle. In real life, people regret many things. One thing that people regret the most is taking people for granted. When bad things happen, many people may take it upon themselves to harm you back as a form of payback.

"The Cask of Amontillado" is a story that covers themes of resentment and revenge. Near the beginning of the story, Montresor vowed to seek revenge on Fortunato because he resented him. Later in the story, Montresor kept his word and sought out revenge, which he did by enclosing Fortunato in a wall. People, when they begin to resent someone, often seek revenge. Through "The Cask of Amontillado" the reader learns that harming someone can cause trouble in the future.

"The Interlopers" has many types of conflict and rivalry. The main conflict in this short story revolves around two men fighting over contested land. The fighting ended with both men dying. Another type of conflict in "The Interlopers" is the men against the environment. In real life many people have rivalries that they later deem as pointless. All of the stories contain conflict.

In all three of the stories, one or more characters deal with distressing events. "The Scarlet Ibis" is

Everyone has dealt with some sort of pain in their lifetime, whether it was emotional or physical. "The Scarlet Ibis", which was written by James Hurst, is a tragic story of regret and grief. "The Cask of Amontillado" by Edgar Allan Poe is a story that explores themes of resentment and revenge. "The Interlopers" by Saki shows that conflict isn't helpful in the long run. These stories all share themes of pain and suffering. In these three stories the reader learns that causing others harm not only harms them but also harms you.

"The Scarlet Ibis", a story about a disabled child and his brother, is a story that covers topics of remorse. In the story Brother pushes Doodle too far, which ends in death. The stories retrospective writing shows the Brothers guilt for the death of Doodle. In real life, people regret many things. One thing that people regret the most is taking people for granted. When bad things happen, many people may take it upon themselves to harm you back as a form of payback.

“The Cask of Amontillado” is a story that covers themes of resentment and revenge. Near the beginning of the story, Montresor vowed to seek revenge on Fortunato because he resented him. Later in the story, Montresor kept his word and sought out revenge, which he did by enclosing Fortunato in a wall. People, when they begin to resent someone, often seek revenge. Through “The Cask of Amontillado” the reader learns that harming someone can cause trouble in the future.

“The Interlopers” has many types of conflict and rivalry. The main conflict in this short story revolves around two men fighting over contested land. The fighting ended with both men dying. Another type of conflict in “The Interlopers” is the men against the environment. In real life many people have rivalries that they later deem as pointless. All of the stories contain conflict.

In all three of the stories one or more characters deal with distressing events. “The Scarlet Ibis” is a story containing death and sorrow. “The Cask of Amontillado” is a story of a man retaliating against another man that he hates. “The Interlopers” is a story of two men disputing about a piece of land. “The Scarlet Ibis”, “The Cask of Amontillado”, and “The Interlopers” all have unpleasant themes.