

---

The History Of Burger King

Everything was started when two entrepreneurs James McLamore and David Edgerton when they opened a company a Burger King. And this was a justified goal, because at that time people had already recovered from the consequences of World War II and began to live for their pleasure. Burger King was supposed to become a family restaurant, so McLamore and Edgerton are starting to offer plastic cutlery atypical for fast foods in Burger King. Simultaneously, the matter of McDonald's, the organization that today is the primary contender to Burger King, was creating. In 1957, the McLamore and Edgerton drive-thru eatery extended the menu just because by including the now-famous Whopper burger, a sort of Big Mac partner on the McDonald's menu. It is important that at Burger King uniform costs were set over the whole eatery network and these costs didn't change by any chance in the midst of an emergency. In any case, burgers at Burger King were more costly than at McDonald's, and this pattern has proceeded right up 'til today.

In 1959, McLamore and Edgerton chose to move their business outside of Florida and use diversifying for this. Along these lines, they began offering the rights to open cafés under the Burger King brand to huge financial specialists. The plan worked superbly, be that as it may, in contrast to McDonald's, McLamore and Edgerton didn't give enough consideration to observing consistence with the prerequisites of the franchisee. Subsequently, the Burger King establishment arrange started to disintegrate. Against this foundation, in 1967, it was chosen to sell Burger King (all the more exactly, a system of 274 cafés) to Pillsbury. The arrangement added up to $ 18 million. In 1959, McLamore and Edgerton chose to move their business outside of Florida and use diversifying for this. Along these lines, they began offering the rights to open cafés under the Burger King brand to huge financial specialists. The plan worked superbly, be that as it may, in contrast to McDonald's, McLamore and Edgerton didn't give enough consideration to observing consistency with the prerequisites of the franchisee. Subsequently, the Burger King establishment arrange started to disintegrate. Against this foundation, in 1967, it was chosen to sell Burger King (all the more exactly, a system of 274 cafés) to Pillsbury. The arrangement added up to $ 18 million. In any case, in any event, considering all the triumphs of Burger King, the organization was not ready to get around its rival - McDonald's.

Today, the Burger King cheap food chain works in all conditions of America and in 56 nations around the globe, and the quantity of guests surpasses 15.7 million individuals every day. Also their locations have a lot of in CIS countries: Russia, Kazakhstan, Belarus, and so on.