
What A Good Student Looks Like

A good student is someone who has the following qualities: Respectful, gets help whether its inside help or outside help, and is organized.

First, being respectful is the least important quality of a good student. A respectful student raises their hand in class and does not blurt out. They also use manners when speaking to the teacher or other classmates. For example, when asking to go to the bathroom, a good student would "may I please use the bathroom?" Paying attention in class is not only respectful to the teacher, but also to other students. For instance, if a student is playing with their hair or making noise at their desk, they would not be paying attention and would be distracting you from being able to pay attention. Next, a good student gets help whether its inside the classroom or outside the classroom. Inside the classroom help would be staying after class to the teacher to help you with an assignment or staying after class to any questions you may have.

Finally, the most important quality of a good student is being organized.

In the end, being a good student with all three qualities is a good probability that you will make decent grades in classes and succeed for the future.

A good student is someone who has the following qualities: Respectful, gets help whether its inside help or outside help, and is organized.

First, being respectful is the least important quality of a good student. A respectful student raises their hand in class and does not blurt out. They also use manners when speaking to the teacher or other classmates. For example, when asking to go to the bathroom, a good student would "may I please use the bathroom?" Paying attention in class is not only respectful to the teacher, but also to other students. For instance, if a student is playing with their hair or making noise at their desk, they would not be paying attention and would be distracting you from being able to pay attention.

Next, a good student gets help whether its inside the classroom or outside the classroom. Inside the classroom help would be staying after class to the teacher to help you with an assignment or staying after class to any questions you may have.

Finally, the most important quality of a good student is being organized.

In the end, being a good student with all three qualities is a good probability that you will make decent grades in classes and succeed for the future.